Town Centres: Planning for the Future

Presentation by Jonathan Wallace

10 July 2019

Our work in town centres

Structure of Presentation

- Context
- Town Centres: Planning for the Future
- Concluding Thoughts

Context

Town centres are facing ‘a perfect storm’

- The challenge of multi-channel retailing
- Movement from product purchase to subscription models
- The increasing importance of convenience
- Decline in brand loyalty

A bloodbath of national retailers

- Retailers squeezed by rental levels and business rates – full effect yet to be felt
- A large number of operators have gone into administration or entered CVAs
- New store models adapting to meet challenges

Online retail is still growing (and not slowing down just yet)

A need for change

Town centres are still an important focal point for communities but:

- Town Centres are facing significant challenges
- A need to improve our understanding of how centres can adapt to change
- Lichfields and the North East England Chamber of Commerce agreed to work collaboratively on a research project: “Town Centres – Planning for the Future”

Project Aims

- To identify the main issues affecting town centres
- To engage with stakeholders – including operators, developers, agents and the public sector
- To look at different towns in the North East and identify example of best practice
- To recommend improvements and work together to implement them

Methodology

- Series of roundtables with stakeholders to consider different aspects of town centres:
 - Economic Characteristics
 - Planning and the Physical Environment
 - Business Improvement Districts and Other Regeneration Initiatives
- Field work identifying best practice from the UK
- Report for the region feeding into other work on town centres locally and nationally

Middlesbrough

Berwick

Hexham

Stanley

Key Findings - Economic Characteristics

- Ageing and dwindling customer base
- Town centre workforce reducing
- Shift from retail to leisure – shopping as a leisure activity
- Too much reliance on retail
- Need for diversity and non-retail anchors
- Regular events draw people in
- Public can play a role – do they want a town centre?

Key Findings – Planning and the Physical Environment

- Mixed approach from local authorities
- Budget cuts have led to reduced staff resources/expertise
- Importance of ‘civic pride’
- Need for a holistic approach
- Use of planning and other powers inconsistent
- Lack of flexibility over change of use

Key Findings - Business Improvement Districts and Regeneration Initiatives

- Mixed success for BID's
- Many businesses don't engage
- Town Centre Management can be effective but rare in practice
- Very limited business support for retailers

Recommendations

Creating a Vision

- Create a vision
- Develop a USP
- Promote the Centre

Recommendations

Broadening the Offer

- Expand the offer through a more flexible approach
- Make it family friendly
- Create new anchors which maintain and drive footfall

Recommendations

A pro-active and holistic approach

- Improve the environment
- Events and activities
- Accommodate residential development

Recommendations

Business Leading the way

- Foster collaboration
- Support independents
- Embrace online and multi-channel retailing

Concluding Thoughts...

The Government is finally grasping the nettle...

- The High Street Report and Response to Select Committee:
 - Town Centre Taskforce
 - Future High Streets Fund
 - Changes to Permitted Development (PD) Rights
 - Proposed changes to Use Classes Order
- Business rates changes

What can local authorities do?

- More flexible planning policies
- Broaden the offer within town centres – increase the reasons to visit
- Create new anchors
- Reinforce their role within the community through events/activities
- Support the independent sector where possible

A range of tools are available

- Need realistic yet positive strategy for town centres
- LA's should consider scope for AAPs, LDOs, CPOs, HAZs
- Other potential vehicles for change:
 - Business Improvement Districts
 - Town/City Centre Management
 - Mayoral Development Corporation

“Retail most definitely does have a future, people will continue to use physical stores in all of our lifetimes. Believe it or not, a high street 20 years from now might not even look radically different from its current incarnation, albeit with a reduced overall retail footprint, a greater sense of purpose and a lot more love.”
